

EUROLICS

The European network for the economics of learning, innovation, and competence building systems

Innovation and Sustainable Economic Development

EUROLICS and the department of Economics of Ege University cordially invite paper submissions for the Eurolics symposium to be held on April 2-3, 2020 in Izmir Turkey. The purpose of the event is to bring together scholars working on innovation and evolutionary economics in broad terms, to increase connectivity, communication, and rapport within the community by sharing latest works. We are planning an event with an estimated 40 papers over a day and a half. Giovanni Dosi (LEM-Scuola Superiore Sant'Anna) and Erol Taymaz (Middle East Technical University) will deliver keynote speeches for the symposium. The broad issues to be covered in the symposium include, but not limited to

- Industry 4.0
- Digital Economy
- Agent based models of innovation
- The economics of firm and corporate governance
- The impact of new and emerging technologies on employment and growth
- Transitions to 'green' growth
- The economics of catch-up by latecomer and emerging economies
- Sustainability and structural change
- Poverty and its eradication
- Social inequality
- Recent developments in evolutionary economics
- Network economics

Background

Eurolics is the European branch of Globelics, a worldwide network of more than 2000 scholars engaged in research on how innovation and competence building contribute to economic and sustainable development. Eurolics is a platform for cooperation and interactive learning and sets out to develop and design activities that address the current problems in Europe related to inclusion and sustainability in the context of globalisation. Our short-term objectives are to organise a series of workshops, collaborative publications and research projects integrating the research capacities of the network and reaching out to multiple stakeholders including the business and policy community.
